[Faint, illegible handwritten notes]

The chiefe occurrences of both the armies, from the 8. of Aprill, till the 17. of the sayd moneth.

THe Prince of Parma at hys first arriuall into France, with intent to raise the siedge before Roan finding the King to be able to beard him and to keep still the siedge afore the said Towne, seemed to withdraw his forces into Artoys againe, and departing from Newcastle, went ouer the riuer of Somme in Picardie, which when the king did vnderstand, dismissed a great part of his forces, and gaue them leauē to withdraw themselues to their owne houses. The Prince of Parma hauing taken notice thereof by his intelligencers: suddenly thought to haue surprised the king, and his armie lying before Roan, and the King being gone to Deepe the eight day of Aprill, news wer brought to sir Roger Williams, by one who had serued sir Thomas Morgan, that the prince of Parma had fully determined and purposed to lodge in Darnetall on Monday being the tenth of the saide moneth : wherevpon aswell as vpon other aduertisements, Sir Roger Williams dispatched in all hast letters vnto his Maiestie, who at the receit therof presently the next day in the euening repaired to the Camp then before Roan : and at his arriuall sent the Duke of Boillon, otherwise the vicount of Tou-raine with eight hundred horses to discover the enemy. The Duke brought newes to the king of the enemies neere approach, very early in the morning, being the tenth of the said moneth. Whereupon the king riding to the shippes that lay in the riuer on the side of New-hauen set such order vnto them as seemed moste meete vnto his maiestie, and causing fire to be put in Crochet, being the place where the shippes lay, sent and dispatched certaine chiefe officers of the armie, to withdraw the siede from Roan, & to retire towards Pont de L'Arches, all which being done as the king had appointed himselfe, hys Maiestie gathered a head of all his forces, betweene the tenth of April, and the fifteenth of the sayd moneth.

The fifteenth day of Aprill, the king began to march with suche forces as were come of strangers, and his other nobilitie towards the enemy, and quartered the same night in Fontaine Le Bourg, three leagues from Roan, and eight

eight leagues or thereabout from the Prince of Parma his Campe.

The sixteenth of the said moneth, the king hauing appointed his Rendeuous about a League and a halfe from Anglenille in a great plain neere a Winde-mill : his forces failed not to finde his Maiestie at the place appointed : and marching thither in battell aray : the number of the horsemen were in sight at the least betweene seuen and eight thousand horses, and about 16000. footmen besides the troupes of the Duke Monpensier, and the Marshall d'Amons, who were expected to meete the king at the next Rendeuous, the 17. of Aprill, and were at Pont de l'Arches the 15. of the said moneth.

The Baron Biron, being sent by the king, to lie in Ambuscado with twelue hundred horses, betweene New-hauen, and the Duke of Parma his armie, discomfited a certaine conuoy coming from the Gouvernour of New-hauen, and sent the 16. of Aprill late in the euening, some Waggones with prouision of warre, and six Spaniards, prisoners to the king.

The Kinge marcheth towardes the Encmie with twentie peeces of Ordinance as wel great as small, and the sixteenth daye of Aprill cawed them to be discharged at his arriual at Angenille, his quarter that night being five leagues from the Princes Campe, to giue notice of his comming to them of Candebeck.

Viſuals were ſomewhat ſcarce in our camp, becauſe Diep was ſhut vppe and nothing could come thence, by reaſon of the Prince of Parma his marching betweene our Armie and the ſaid towne, but aſſoone as the Kinge had ſent a Conuoy from his quarter, viſuales and all other munition were ſent by the gouernor of Diep to our Campe.

The kinges ſhips haue hindered the Prince of Parma for plantynge his Ordinance to batter the towne of Cauedebeck, and haue had a fight with certaine veſſelles laden with Wine, & other prouiſion of war to relieue the prince of Parma, and hauing taken ſome and ſunk the reſt, ſent thoſe that were taken into Diep.

The kinge hath ſtopped the paſſage where the Prince of Parma entred firſte into Fraunce, with ſiue thouſand horſſes, vnder the leading and conduct of the duke Longueuille: and in forces, courage, & magnanimitie, is very forward God be thanked to incounter his enimie.

By other letters credibly reported.

The kinge vnderſtandinge by diuers of his ſpies, how that the Prince of Parma had leſte ſome of his companies in ſeuerrall villages, thither the king made and hath ſlaine them all, amongſt he which the Duke of Parmas ſonne is ſlaine, slaine, it is crediblie reported also that the duke himselfe is shot into the arme lieng before Cau- debeck. They of New-hauen did send out twelue vessels, in ech vessell a hundreth men to cleare the riuer, and to conuey wine and other necessaries for warre to the Duke of Parma, but the Hollanders that lie there and keepe it for the K. did so mightilie resist them, that of the Hollan- ders Admirall there is but twelue men leste aliue, and some of the twelue vesselles are ouer-throwne, and other some taken, and those that be taken are brought to Diep and the marchan-dize solde there and all their men slaine. The king looks daily for more companies to come to helpe him. The Duke of Parma is now at Tankuille, whiche is about eight miles from Newhauen and the kinge is at Yuerot, whiche is about fixe miles from Tankeuille, keeping the waie from Roane, Diep, and Caudebeck. All the kings people are fully determined to fight the battaile, if they can any waie get their enemies to it: and it is verilie thought that if the Duke of Parma doo not find the better meanes to retire the sooner, hee is like to remaine inclosed and therefore it is thoughte the Duke dooeth drawe himselfe toward Newhauen, there to receiue more succour, or else to get away by Sea.
